PREFACE

Source and Selection of Words.—Use has been made of scientific investigations to ascertain what words the child will need to write as a child and what words he will most probably need to write as an adult engaged in carrying on the everyday affairs of life. Prominent among these investigations are: The Ayres List; the Jones List; the Cook and O'Shea List; and the Tidyman List. In addition, the author made a tabulation of all the words used in seven modern textbooks and determined just which texts included each particular word. After these data were carefully checked, there were selected 3,400 different words which constitute the basal word list of "The Nonpareil Speller." It is believed that this basal word list contains practically all the common words that usually appear in our written vocabulary; words of uncommon occurrence are omitted. It should also be stated that every word appearing in the Ayres List and in the Tidyman List, as well as the so-called one hundred spelling "demons" by Jones, is included in the basal list of words to be studied by the pupil. There is a supplementary list, by grades, of 457 words for the enrichment of the vocabulary.

Simplicity in Organization.—In each grade throughout the textbook, each day's work is grouped under the Arabic numerals. In each word group, the new words appear in heavy-face type and with a slight spacing to indicate syllabication; the other words in the group are review words. In Grades Two and Three, two new words are presented in each lesson; in Grades Four to Six, three new words; and in Grades Seven to Nine, four new words.

If it become evident to the teacher that the class is prepared to advance more rapidly than the regular outline of lessons as indicated, lesson assignments can be enlarged. Furthermore, the arrangement of the textbook lends itself readily to a preliminary testing of all new words appearing in any given week, or in a longer period if desirable. Such a procedure will reveal to the class and to the individual pupil those words that need intensive study. Simplicity and flexibility in the organization of the spelling material have been kept constantly in view, and it is believed that teachers will experience no difficulty in using the textbook to meet varying classroom demands.

Reviews.—One of the outstanding features of "The Nonpareil Speller" is the systematic, continuous, and unusually large amount of drill work provided. In the lower grades, every word appears at least five times; in the advanced grades each word is presented not fewer than three times. In all the grades, those words that have been found by scientific tests to be the most troublesome are reviewed more often than the words of average difficulty.

In Grades Two to Six, the word is reviewed two days after its initial appearance, one week after its second appearance, and usually about two weeks after its first presentation. And lastly, all new words are given a "GENERAL REVIEW" at intervals of four to six weeks. In order that the weekly review lessons in the lower grades may not be too difficult for the child to master, there are included two or three review words presented in the preceding lesson. There is no loss in economy of time on account of the ample drill work as provided, inasmuch as all of the prescribed work in each grade can be covered systematically in the usual school term of eight or nine months. Sufficient drill work to enable the child to spell automatically has been one of the chief aims of the author in preparing and presenting this textbook.

Additional Aids.—The following special devices are given to aid the pupil in his effort to learn to spell correctly:

I. Suggestions as to how and when to use the dictionary.
II. A few fundamental Spelling Rules and their development.
III. Discussion, definitions, and "pairings" of the more common homonyms found in the basal word list.
IV. The insertion of the Ayres Measuring Scale for Ability in Spelling with adequate instructions for its proper and effective use by the teacher.
V. Insertion by grades of the basal words in alphabetical arrangement. From Grades Four to Nine, all words have the indicated pronunciation and the dictionary markings to aid the pupil in ascertaining the correct pronunciation of a word. This feature is of special value to those students who do not have dictionaries.

SOME FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE PROPER TEACHING OF SPELLING

Solomon's saying, "Of making many books there is no end," applies with peculiar force to the voluminous writings now extant with reference to methods of teaching spelling. Only the specialist can be remotely familiar with all the books, pamphlets, monographs, and other publications dealing with all the phases of psychological principles involved in the teaching of spelling. What is here proposed is to set in simple and usable form only a few of the many important factors that should guide the rank and file of the teachers in the teaching of this particular subject. While the generally accepted principles set forth below are necessarily somewhat general, yet they should serve as guide-posts by which the teacher may judge as to the correctness and effectiveness of the methods employed.

It has been clearly and convincingly demonstrated by actual tests that intensive, motivated class drill under the teacher's direction is productive of better results than individual study by the immature and unsupervised student. Hence, the spelling period should largely be a teaching period.

It is neither intended nor expected that any teacher shall endeavor to carry into execution all of the suggested plan herein presented. It is recognized that it would be unwise to do so.

What each teacher should do is to study carefully the specific needs of the class, analyze the suggestions incorporated herein, and then select and use such of these suggestions as will strengthen her work with the class and promote the best interests of the individual pupils. It is both a duty and a pleasure for the author to state that he is indebted to many investigators and eminent teachers for helpful information. The brief outline below is drawn largely from that excellent work, "The Teaching of Spelling," by Tidyman.

Among the more important factors in teaching spelling, as approved by leading specialists and authors, the following steps are indicated:

1. Accurate pronunciation is very important in learning to spell a word.
2. Stress on the syllabication of a word is an important element in learning.
3. The teacher should develop the meaning of words before testing or teaching.
4. Use of words in sentences will emphasize to the pupils the practical utility of spelling and afford opportunity for practice.
5. In general, visual presentation is superior to mere auditory presentation.
6. Important exercises in visual presentation are: writing the words singly or in logical groups on the board before the children; picking out the familiar, unfamiliar, and difficult parts of the words; emphasizing the unfamiliar and difficult parts, and associating these parts with similar parts of other words.
7. Some form of visual presentation, oral spelling, and writing are found in practically every "best" method.
8. The recitation should be a learning period.
9. Writing a word is an aid in learning to spell it.
10. Attentive repetition is highly important, but the amount of repetition necessary to fix the word varies greatly among different individuals.
11. Each pupil should give special attention to those words repeatedly missed by him.
12. Insist on careful spelling in all written work, and correct errors without fail.
13. In written work, cross out the misspelled word, writing the correct form above, and then have the pupil copy for correction.
14. Only a very few Spelling Rules should be used, and these should be developed.
15. Urge pupils in the Fourth Grade and all subsequent grades to consult the dictionary when in doubt as to the spelling, pronunciation, or meaning of a word.
16. Any general method of presentation must be adapted to meet the differences in words and in pupils.

When the theory as above outlined is actually reduced to practice, the procedure resolves itself frequently into this plan: (a) as the teacher writes the word on the board, she pronounces it slowly and distinctly; (b) the meaning of the word is given by the teacher, by one or more pupils, by using the word in a sentence; (c) attention is called to the division of the word into syllables, and each syllable is spelled orally by the pupils; (d) the word is next viewed as a whole, pronounced aloud, then written on a loose sheet of paper; (e) children close their eyes and try to see the word, spelling the word softly to themselves; (f) children study all the words intently for just a few minutes, and then the teacher dictates the words to the pupils, who write all the words in the regular spelling note book.

The dull reign of monotony that pervades and deadens altogether too many "spelling classes" can be eliminated by varying the method of teaching the class through the use of contests and games, such as Syllable game, Jumble Letter game, Rhyming game, Derivative game, etc. These and other games, when properly conducted, make increasing demands upon the ingenuity and resourcefulness of the child and stimulate a real and abiding interest in the spelling exercise. Occasionally, the review lesson may be oral and resolved into a spelling match, though in general such lesson should be written and the words used in sentences.

By all means, students should be urged to keep a permanent note book in which all misspelled words are recorded in alphabetical order. These words should be studied intensively by the pupil, and then be given in incidental tests until it is shown that all such words have been thoroughly mastered. Too often, the close of the recitation period marks the end of study and of follow-up of that particular word list regardless of whether the "casualty list" be large or small.

Finally, every child like every community has its own environment. The vocabulary of any textbook needs to be supplemented with the words and expressions prevailing in the neighborhood. The teacher must see to it that such words are studied and thoroughly mastered by the pupil if a high standard of spelling efficiency is to be attained.

TO THE GIRLS AND BOYS WHO USE THIS BOOK

If your teacher were to tell each of you to make ten thousand steps, you would likely say, "I can't; that's too many." But when you were told that you would not have to make all of the steps in one day or in one week, then the task would appear much easier. And you also know that you make only one step at a time. Is that hard to do?

There are in this book about three thousand words that you need to learn how to spell. Oh, no, no! you do not have to learn how to spell all of them in one day, in one month, or even in one year. All you need to do is to learn how to spell just one word at a time. Does that seem too hard to do?

Now, here is what you are expected to do each day. While you are in the Second and the Third Grades, you have a whole day in which to learn the two new words in each lesson. As you grow older and bigger, you will be able to learn to spell the three new words in each day's lesson; and finally you will be given four new words in each day's lesson.

Learn how to spell every word by following this plan:

1. Use your ears: Listen carefully as your teacher pronounces the word.
2. Use your voice: Pronounce the word aloud slowly and very clearly.
3. Use your eyes: Look closely at the word, at each syllable, at each letter, to see if the word is spelled just as it sounds. Watch for silent letters, as they are "trouble spots." Spell the word over and over.
4. Use your mind's eye: Close your eyes and try hard to see the word in your book, syllable by syllable, as you pronounce the word in a whisper. Do you see the word clearly?
5. Use your hand: Write the word plainly on paper or on the board.

Now, look at the word in the book to see if you have made any mistake in writing the word. If you have made even one tiny mistake, begin with the first step and go through every step again. Do this until you can write the word correctly.

APPENDIX A

Contractions

Note:—The teacher should, from time to time, develop the spelling of these contractions as they are normally used in oral English by the pupils.

In formal letters and in business communications, it is not good usage to make use of colloquial expressions or of contractions. All such communications should be clear, direct, and expressed in dignified language.

On the other hand, letters written to friends and informal notes are regarded as a sort of personal chat. It is quite proper to be wholly informal in such matters and for that reason it is permissible to use colloquial terms of speech and contractions. Valid authority is found among eminent and distinguished writers for writing to friends and acquaintances in an informal manner.

The fact that frequently these familiar expressions are misspelled indicates a carelessness and negligence that cannot be excused. Be sure that you know how to spell every one of the contractions given below.

don't	do not	can't	cannot you're	you are	we're	we are
we'll	we will	you'd	you would
I've	I have	won't	will not isn't	is not	it's	it is he's	he is	couldn't	could not hasn't	has not	haven't	have not won't	will not	they're	they are what's	what is	wasn't	was not there's	there is	weren't	were not that's	that is	aren't	are not
where's	where is	you'll	you will

APPENDIX B

Homonyms

There are some important words that are pronounced exactly alike, but differ in meaning and usually in spelling. Such words are called homonyms. You should learn thoroughly the meaning and the spelling of each "pair" of homonyms listed below, as these words are commonly used in everyday life.

Note to Teacher:—It is a mooted point as to whether homonyms should be taught "separately" or "together." The weight of expert opinion is to use the "separate" method in initial presentation, especially in the lower grades; the "together" method when the words have been confused by the pupil. It is highly important that the teacher devote to homonyms intensive drill until they are mastered. It is advisable to give here only a brief list of the more common homonyms that the child may be expected to use in his written vocabulary.

Word	Definition	Sentence
1 no	not, not any	The lazy boy finds no work to do.
know	to perceive, to understand	We know that truth is beauty.
2 son	a male child	The son plays ball.
sun	the heavenly body which gives the light of day	The sun sets in the west.
3 weak	deficient in physical strength	That boy has a weak ankle.
week	a period of seven days	Learn your lessons every week.
4 there	at that place, point, etc.	The book is there on the floor.
their	of or belonging to them	Their hats are new.
5 dew	moisture condensed on the surfaces of cool bodies	The dew was on the fleece.
due	owed or owing as a debt	The money was past due.

With the aid of the dictionary or the teacher, study these "pairs" of words, defining and using them in sentences.

hall	waste	dear	berry	die	male	new haul	waist	deer	bury	dye	mail	knew flee	blue	would	sail	hair	beet	prays flea	blew	wood	sale	hare	beat	praise tale	flour	through	made	sole	pair	to tail	flower	threw	maid	soul	pare	too
					pear	two

Distinguish carefully between its belonging to; as in "Its honor was at stake."

it's it is; as in "It's more blessed to give than to receive."

APPENDIX C

The Spelling Demons

Note:—According to Professor W. Franklin Jones, who conducted an extensive investigation of spelling in children's themes, the following one hundred words were found to be those most frequently misspelled. In "The Nonpareil Speller," 88% of these spelling "DEMONS" are studied before the beginning of the SIXTH GRADE. Give intensive drill on all of these words as they appear in each grade.

APPENDIX D

The Ayres Measuring Scale

The Ayres Measuring Scale for Ability in Spelling is herewith reproduced in this book by permission of the Russell Sage Foundation. Dr. Leonard P. Ayres, who conducted the investigation, found from an aggregate of 1,400,000 spellings that the following one thousand words were used most frequently in writing. This scientific list constitutes a fundamental vocabulary which should be used for drill, review, and testing purposes.

The spelling ability of a class may readily be ascertained by the use of these lists. If, for example, the class or group be tested on words selected from column L, second-grade pupils should spell correctly 50 per cent; third-grade, 73 per cent; fourth-grade, 88 per cent; fifth-grade, 94 per cent; sixth-grade, 98 per cent; seventh-grade, 100 per cent.

The words in any column are approximately equal in difficulty; it is best, therefore, to choose all the words for a test from a single column. Twenty words will be sufficient to secure a reasonably reliable measure of the spelling ability of a class; fifty to one hundred words, for an individual.

HEADING OF THE AYRES MEASURING SCALE

The above is a reduced reproduction of the Ayres Measuring Scale For Ability in Spelling. On account of the size of the page, it has been necessary to detach the columns of words from the scale. These columns of words, however, are found on the preceding pages and are grouped in the order in which they appear in the Scale. Word list A belongs under column A, list B under column B, list C under column C, etc.

APPENDIX E

Basal Word List

Under the direction of the teacher, pupils should study carefully the table below showing how the various sounds of the letters are indicated according to the diacritical markings in Webster's "New International Dictionary." The supervised study of this table should begin in the Fourth Grade, and recurrent drill work should be given in succeeding grades until the pupils are able to use the dictionary speedily and effectively. Attention should be given not only to pronunciation, but also to definitions, synonyms, and parts of speech. Special attention should be given to those words whose pronunciation and meaning are determined by the location of the accent mark; as, for example, "express," "convict," etc. A number of such words appear in the list of basal words, and appropriate drill work should not be omitted.
